

CHARLEY DAY, the Highland Park Pharmacy man who brews and dispenses coffee to that neighborhood, has come up with a theory that maybe should be kept from Soviet intelligence. The way to damage the United States, he says, would be to atom-bomb Brazil. "It would shatter the nerves of our people," he explained. "Without coffee, they would lose their morale." We think Mr. Day has the wrong angle on this, though. If people spent the time working that they spent on coffee, the country would collapse from overproduction. There wasn't any farm problem in Washington until Secretary Benson cut out the coffee break. Somebody then had time to think up one.
